2. PEER GROUP LEARNING:

Post corona educational institutions experience is little different for everyone associated with it however we all are excepting and experimenting new teaching- learning ideas and techniques in our classrooms. Peer learning is a teaching or learning from fellow students where students can use to become familiar with their peers, draw responses from shy peers and develop their own thoughts on the topic in question. It will help students to develop their critical thinking, problem solving skills and interpersonal skills. Teacher as facilitator creates the peer groups and observes the interaction without participating in the class. For this activity topics were given to the students as per their convenience and they discussed entire peer learning strategies and classroom planning with the teacher. For this activity B.A. 1st year class was selected so that they can pursue such activities in their next classes. Details are given bellow:

3. BLENDED LEARNING: FLIPPED CLASSROOM

Flipped classroom enables students to take charge of their learning process. In traditional classrooms it is difficult for all students, especially those with attention issues or other special needs sit quietly and concentrate during the presentation of the lesson. In the flipped classroom, students take control of the process, thereby improving their soft skills like resilience and communication and it also gives students opportunity to speak in front of audience. Students can learn the concepts at their own pace. Students become much more involved during the lesson discussion with the flipped classroom style of instruction by engaging in debates, small group discussions etc. In nutshell, a flipped class switches the activities traditionally done in class with those completed after class.

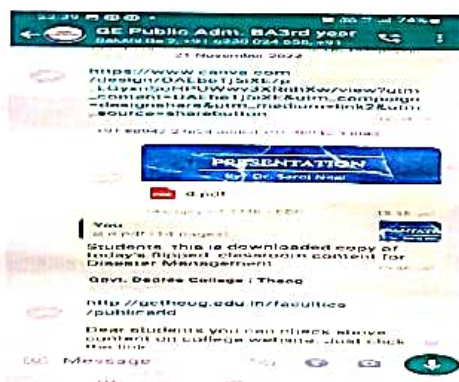

For flipped class room, course content was provided on college website one day before flipped class room activity. Next day students enthusiastically came up with their written homework, queries and doubts. This was really wonderful experience for the teacher as provider of e-content and application based content. This activity extends teachers responsibility and involvement in providing course material before class. Faculty development programme (FDP) experience on MOOCS helped a lot in this regard. Details of the activity are given below:
